Flash Forward Backstage Tour of the National Theatre Backstage Tours at the National offer a unique insight into what goes on behind the scenes in a building which houses three theatres and produces 18 shows per year. Fascinating historical details and ingenious tricks of the trade are revealed as experienced, entertaining guides brimming with anecdotes and information lead the backstage tours through the National's three auditoriums and backstage areas. Backstage Tours also visit the production workshops and paintframe (which are unique amongst London theatres) where sets and props are built and decorated giving visitors the chance to see how dramatic illusions are created using wood, latex and paint.

Who's Who Walking tour of Oxford. Inspector Morse and other books, cinema, and TV locations: We visit places associated with writers such as Shakespeare, Lewis Carroll, Thomas Hardy, C S Lewis, J R Tolkien, Oscar Wilde, Kenneth Graham, Graham Greene, Colin Dexter and Philip Pullman. Hollywood's interest in Oxford started with 'A Yank at Oxford' in 1938, followed by 'A Chump at Oxford' with Laurel and Hardy in 1940. 'Oxford' then was synonymous with the old University, and it was not until the 1990s that film makers used the city as a backdrop for more general productions, including the Harry Potter series and a James Bond.
